

HEADLESS WOMAN

This is perhaps one of the most famous sideshow exhibits ever created. Updated, revised, and simplified, the magician patters about an unfortunate accident where a young lady was decapitated, but is still kept alive due to advances in modern medical technology.

At that, the magician draws open a curtained cabinet and sure enough, the audience sees an attractive lady, but a medical device is attached where her head should be. The young lady is fully responsive to verbal commands and can move all parts of her visible body.

This fun sideshow illusion can be used during a regular magic show, or as part of a convention tradeshow booth setting, or as a carnival or Halloween exhibit. The girl is perfectly comfortable, as the head mechanism is attached to the stool-like chair on which she sits. Unlike most other headless illusions, this insures the proper positioning of the head unit at all times.

The quality and workmanship of this prop is exceptional. We are even told that David Copperfield owns one! The illusion comes complete with the head unit, chair/stool, curtained cabinet, and complete instructions. Provide your own girl of course, and she really doesn't have to be headless! $6500 FOB.
